For centuries, US laws and policies have neglected, exploited, and attacked immigrants. Then, the pandemic swept the country, accelerating and magnifying every irreparable harm. Although corporations wouldn't survive without immigrant workers, and communities wouldn't thrive without the ideas and cultural influence of immigrant families, our government enabled the spread of the virus, excluded immigrants from relief, and made our essential workers, sacrificial workers. We're seeing the painfully predictable results in the stories of immigrants across Colorado right now.

To overcome the forces that created this crisis, we must tell, and listen to, stories about the real, human effects of racist and xenophobic laws and policies, as well as stories about the world we want to create.

So we decided to make a documentary.

PREMIERING THIS FALL

This currently-untitled documentary has created a platform for immigrants to stand in their own power, own their story, and demand the change they and their communities want and deserve. Power concedes nothing without a demand, and this project is a clear and specific demand for justice. And while these stories expose the true cost of a global pandemic shouldered by immigrant communities, they also reveal the immense resilience and resistance that will power the coming revolution. We are currently seeking financial support for this short film and the virtual premiere event in November 2020.
